

A Career in Character

This is a short book, but it deals with a lot of big issues. Its the result of years of working in career advisory and job market roles in Europe and the US. Ive seen a lot of people in personal meltdown as a result of careers and jobs which are hurting them, often badly. They cant be themselves, and they cant do the things they love and want to do. A career which conflicts with your character can be a very toxic, destructive thing. The idea is to give you a shot at changing that situation and creating some new perspectives. For example: Lets start with the basics, derived from who you consider yourself to be. Can you really be who you want to be? Can you do the things you need to do, to be that person? What are you trying to achieve, as you? Do you know how to do all that? From which come these questions: If you cant be who you want to be, why not? If you cant do the things you need to do, why not? If you dont know what youre trying to achieve, why not? If you dont know how to do what you want to do, why not? This is a pretty normal, and often grim, situation for a lot of people. Its also fixable. One of the reasons this book doesnt preach or give motivational guidance is because real motives are internal. Only you can actually prove to yourself that you can achieve success on your own terms. If you want out, I hope this helps.
