

The Worlds of Lincoln Kirstein

Finalist, 2008 Pulitzer Prize Lincoln Kirstein was a tireless champion of the arts in America. Working behind the scenes to provide artists with money, space, audiences, and, at times, emotional support, he helped found such landmark cultural institutions as the New York City Ballet, the School of American Ballet, New Yorks Lincoln Center and Stratfords American Shakespeare Festival. Dubermans biography sheds light on this lamentably neglected cultural figure. Though best known as a benefactor of the arts, Kirstein was also an adept critic, poet and novelist who published some fifteen books in his lifetime. From his undergraduate years at Harvard, where he established the influential literary magazine Hound and Horn, as well as the Harvard Society for Contemporary Art (precursor to the Modern Museum of Art), to his complex and historically significant relationship with George Balanchine, Kirsteins contributions were indispensible to the development of the arts in America. Authoritative and elegant, Dubermans biography utilizes previously unavailable documents, including Kirsteins diaries, to reveal the keen eye, incessant self-doubt, and enormous ambition that drove Kirsteins relentless advocacy. The Worlds of Lincoln Kirstein brings attention to an important, but until-now unappreciated figure whose individual contribution to the arts was one of the greatest of the twentieth century.
