

The FASB: The People, the Process, and the Politics

Paul Miller and Paul Bahnson, acclaimed writers of the long-running Spirit of Accounting op-ed column in Accounting Today, have accomplished a complete makeover of FASB: the People, the Process, and the Politics that forthrightly explains and assesses FASB's social mission as well as its structure, procedures, conceptual framework, successes, shortcomings, and future. These veteran educators with first-hand experience at FASB and the SEC have produced a highly readable book for students of all kinds. Full of information that is overlooked by standard accounting and finance textbooks, this volume is packed with information so essential to their education and future success. The authors' insights should revolutionize how analysts, executives, regulators and journalists deal with financial statements. Their explanations of how politics shape financial reporting support their persuasive arguments for providing innovative information to the capital markets while also proving that international standards are both infeasible and undesirable. Serious participants in the capital markets, including accounting and finance educators, cannot be indifferent to this book and its provocative ideas.
